Doesn't have a dedicated autism unit – they have been able to provide appropriate services in the neighborhood school. So far they have been successful with this model. Currently they have about 15-20 students on the autism spectrum in the district. The range of services is everywhere from consultation with classroom teacher to self-contained settings.

Ogden School District has an Autism Team that is available to assist schools who are in need of help/support with issues related to autism. They do not have units specifically for children with autism. Most of the kids can be served through our mild/moderate programs. Children with greater needs would be considered for a placement in one of the severe units.
